Presently more than 100 shops and business are open at Trolley Square, with more opening every month. Included in Trolley Square are movie theatres, restaurants, night spots, sidewalk cafes, gift shops, specialty stores, jewelry stores, clothing and accessory stores, and open market, artists' workshops, home furnishings, and several service-oriented businesses including a bank, savings & loan offices, beauty offices, service stations, etc. You name it, it's there. The bays inside the carbarn are interconnected like streets with shops tucked away in corners, around courtyards and along brick walkways where shoppers will find woodcarvers, leathercrafters, diamond cutters, to bakers and seamstresses to glass blowers and stained glass workers.

The Square is one of the largest private renovation projects in the nation, and has been designed to preserve much of the state's historical past. The developer stated, "Many parts of Utah's historic mansions and buildings scheduled for demolition have been preserved and incorporated into the design of Trolley Square. Thus far we have helped restore a portion of Utah's history in an open market atmosphere for everyone to enjoy."

In 1975 Trolley Square was selected to be listed on the Utah State Register of historical sites, which is a unique distinction for a shopping center. An appropriate plaque is located at the south entrance.

From fairgrounds to trolley barns to Trolley Square, the rehabilitation of this historic piece of real estate is a tribute to man's ingenuity. The size and scope of the project places Trolley Square as one of the unique developments in the nation today, and there's more to come.
